

Education Professionals Require Professional Resumes

By Emily Sanderson

With our population increasing each year, schools are in desperate need of teachers. If you are looking into going into a teaching profession, then you must be aware of the requirement of professional resumes. Make sure you know what fields you seek to pursue. The United States is making cutbacks in the education system in areas such as art, journalism, music and physical education. Because of this, wealthy parents are enrolling their students in afterschool activities, which are included in private school institutions. If you are planning to go in this direction, remember that you will need at least 3-5 years teaching experience and reliable recommendations. However, if you are thinking about going in a different direction with your career, begin thinking about what experience you are going to include and what your objective will be. If you feel you need help, ResumeApple's writers have many resources to help you create a resume that will help you get that teaching position you have been seeking.

Seeking a teaching position? You are in good fortune.

With more teachers retiring and an increasing number of students enrolling in grades K through 12, the demand for skilled teachers is rising. The National Center for Education Statistics predicts that in the next eight years, 2.8 million teachers must join the existing 3.2 million teachers because of retirements, higher enrollment, and teacher turnover.

However, when preparing your teaching resume and cover letter, choose your area of teaching expertise carefully. Although the next generation of the United States' workforce must compete in the global marketplace with the educational programs of countries such as Japan, China, Germany, and the United Kingdom, the public schools in the United States have been making cutbacks for years in areas such as art, journalism, music, and physical education.

To replace the programs that were once offered in these areas by public schools, parents in some communities have opted to place their children in supplemental after-school educational programs. However, only parents who can afford such programs will have the privilege of enrolling their children there. Teachers entering the private teaching arena must be competitive and will often require at least three to five years of teaching experience as well as solid professional recommendations.

If you are just beginning a teaching career or seeking a career shift into the teaching field, you should keep your options open when preparing your resume and cover letter regarding how you describe your experience as well as your career objective. Consider preparing a custom resume for each job opening for which you are applying in order to emphasize the qualifications and job experience that specific employers are seeking.
